24. REPORT INTO THE CHARGED-FOR ENQUIRY SERVICE AT QUEEN'S OWN
ROYAL WEST KENT REGIMENT MUSEUM

The Museums Director presented this report to the Committee. The report gave information to Trustees on the amount of time and resources allocated to each research request received by the Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment Museum Trust by Maidstone Museum staff and how the enquiry charges were structured. It was noted that:

- The enquiry charge was £15 for every enquiry taking longer than 30 minutes. (Following the meeting Officers have clarified that this amount of time was 20 minutes.)
- Enquiries were received by email, telephone, post and via the contact form on the Maidstone Museum website.
- In the current financial year 2017/18, 117 enquiries had been received and logged. Of these, 26 were taken forward and charged for and a total of £390 had been secured.
- The Collection Manager spent on average a day a month working on the administration of these enquiries and the cost for this service was £1410.78 for the past six months. This resulted in a net cost to the Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment Museum Trust of £1020.78.
- A volunteer carried out the research for the enquiry once it had been logged by the Collection Manager, as he had the regimental knowledge to complete the research to a high standard.
- Appendix A detailed the enquiry service charges in other museums. Most museums charged between £15 and £25 for the service, if they charged at all, and it was fairly standard that the first half an hour of the service was free. This indicated that the current enquiry service charge for Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment Museum Trust was at the lower end of charging spectrum.

The Committee was concerned that the cost per hour for the administration of the enquiry was very high and asked whether a volunteer or somebody with a lower hourly rate could carry out this task. Officers informed the Committee that the Collection Manager had the knowledge and expertise to carry out the task efficiently and if anybody else was to do it the process would take much longer. Officers also confirmed that volunteers did not have access to financial information or an email account and so could not perform the task.

In response to a question, the Senior Finance Manager (Client Accountancy) advised the Committee that he would investigate whether gift aid could be collected for the enquiry service as the charge was a donation to the Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment Museum Trust.

The Museums Director confirmed that she would send details of the enquiries received to the Committee, in order that they could understand the substance of the enquiries.

It was noted that the Committee said that members of the public could be directed more easily to the online form when making enquiries about the Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment online.

The Committee agreed with Officers that charging £20 for each enquiry would make the charge more reflective of costs without causing too greater fall in enquiries.

RESOLVED:

1. That the report be noted.
2. That the level of charging for 2018-19 be set at £20.

Note: In the report it stated that for each enquiry the first 30 minutes of research was free and then an enquiry charge would be made. After the meeting, Officers confirmed that the first 20 minutes of research was free and after that an enquiry charge would be made.

25. DURATION OF MEETING

10.00 a.m. to 10.56 a.m.

Executive Summary

The report shows the work that has been completed by museum staff on behalf of Queens Own Royal West Kent Regiment Museum Trust during 2017. The year has seen a number of events and activities related to the QORWKR museum including use of the collections by the Learning Service, increased presence on social media and the continued upgrading of collections information on our Adlib system. A list of donated objects is also included.

This report makes the following recommendation to this Committee:

That the annual report be noted.

Meeting	Date
QOWKRMT	16/01/18

1. INTRODUCTION AND BACKGROUND

This report provides the annual report on work of Maidstone Museums in the provision of services to the QOWKR Museum.

Learning

The Learning Team has run several workshops based on WW1 and WW2 related to artefacts and history of the QORWK regiment throughout 2017. In addition, continuing from last year, the museum ran a series of WW1 themed Arts Awards days for schools (and families) also where children investigated different elements of WW1 looked at different pieces of art linked to the war and found out about soldiers from the regiment.

In total 338 school children have engaged specifically with the collection and gallery in formal learning activities since January 2017:

- 87 children for WWI workshops/WWI Arts Awards,
- 77 children for the WWII workshop.
- 174 for other Arts Awards (including the uniforms and medal design etc)
- (11 children with parents for family Arts Award day, not with schools)

Publicity

Further to suggestions in the January 2017 committee meeting, there has been increased social media from the museum in 2017 relating to the QORWK, including posts regarding a visit by the Sikh Heritage Group to view the Sutlej gun, WW1 centenaries of action in which QORWK were involved such as Passchendaele, military photos/archive, and most notably the surrender of Jerusalem by the Ottomans to the British Forces in December 1917. The museum has lent a number of items relating to it, such as the Keys to Jerusalem, to the Tower of David Museum in Jerusalem for a temporary exhibition. This has created interest amongst regimental and religious groups, and is publicizing the collection internationally. The most recent post on Facebook/Twitter/Instagram:

This week saw the centenary of Jerusalem's Ottoman surrender to British Troops on 11th December 1917 during the First World War.

The 2/20th London Regiment (linked to The Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment) were at the surrender, and two cooks are said to have unofficially received the ceremonial keys on 9th December 1917 from Jerusalem dignitaries, including the mayor, priests, rabbis and imams, bearing the keys of the city and a white flag. General Sir Edmund Allenby walked into Jerusalem following the official surrender on 11 December 1917. The keys from the Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment Museum are currently on temporary loan to an exhibition at the Tower of David Museum, Jerusalem.

Thanks to Julian Munby for his photo from the exhibition in Jerusalem, with the keys (the 2 on the left).

Maidstone Museums' Collections Development Panel, has received a high number of offered donations this year, including QORWK items, and with representatives from across the museums departments meeting quarterly to assess and decide on items offered for donation, a more strategic and sustainable approach is being undertaken to acquisitions. As such a number of items offered to the QORWK were not accepted, primarily because they are already duplicated within the collection or did not fit the collecting policy.

Gallery & Exhibitions

No major redisplay work has been undertaken in the permanent gallery in 2017. A number of the medal drawers have developed faults over time, but these have been fixed by the interpretation team in 2017 to ensure the security of artefacts and safety of visitors.

A digital timeline was developed during last year's 'Coming Home' exhibition, detailing WW1 events on the Home Front, Western Front, and involving the QORWK Regiment during WW1. This remains on the museum website, being viewable for the length of the WW1 commemorations here: <http://museum.maidstone.gov.uk/world-war-one-exhibition-timeline/> . It proves a useful resource for visitors and school groups.

Activities

Café Culture sessions have increased in popularity: The informal group, meeting once a month, is open to over 65s and a legacy of the award winning and innovative 'Museums on Prescription' programme run between UCL and Canterbury Christchurch University. It demonstrated the health and wellbeing impact of museums on socially isolated older people. During this year the Collections and Learning Teams at Maidstone Museums held a WW1/QORWK regiment themed session with a talk by the Regimental volunteers, Steve Finnis. The themes for these sessions change from month to month, so it is likely that the regiment and collection will feature in future sessions also.

Documentation

Cataloguing of the collections continues. Volunteer, Steve Finnis continues to work on the QORWK photographic collection. The information is in the process of being updated digitally by staff on the existing access database and will be uploaded to Adlib (the new Collections Management System), longer term as part of the Human History Collection digital audit by the end of 2018. This process will enable research and additional information to be added to increase our understanding of the collection, as well as making the items more usable and accessible going forward.

Conservation/Collections Care

No new collections care issues have been raised in 2017 – this will be reviewed in line with display needs and budget.

Staffing

In 2017 the Collections Officer post has been re-recruited with Pernille Richards and the Collections Officer post (Part Time) by Paris Linkin.
